

Once upon a time there was a farmer and a vine.

The pages that follow are filled with one of the truest love stories of all times. If you decided to read ahead you have discovered that we are sourcing wines from all over the world.

At a glance this might seem contradictory to our unwavering commitment to local sourcing but I urge you all to take a moment and discover what our wine program is truly offering.

Our region is full of growers and watermen that can supply us with a variety of high quality meats, fish, shellfish and produce. Although Maryland and Virginia have started to produce some world-class wines, there are not enough high quality producers just yet.

Our solution was to reach out to growers in the global wine community and ask who is following our same guiding principles of returning the maximum profit back to the individual producing the good or supplying the service?

Who is treating the land with respect and considering the impact of their actions?

What follows is the passion projects of farmers from around the world, farmers that primarily focus on growing grapes for wine. Each of these wines is grown using the least amount of interventions possible. You won't find any indicators of biodynamic or organic certifications noted on the menu but know that each wine has been made from grapes utilizing those methods. I hope you will join us in partnering with growers who share our commitment of producing the best of what their regions have to offer in an environmentally sustainable and socially responsible way.

Please ask us if you have any questions, we are here to help.

Cheers!

Red Wine - Varieties off the Beaten Path

Felicia: Zinfandel is never coming off of the list.

Rob: Why?

Felicia: It's the chameleon of wines. And it goes with everything. I want it with mahi mahi, I want it with asparagus, I want it with trout, AND I want it with ribeye.

Rob: ...

Felicia: You just want people to drink more grower champagne.

Rob: True.
